Talks with the government resumed today after a night of talks failed to bring a breakthrough. Meanwhile, the Houthi militia said it will release a group of female soldiers after their release in a prisoner exchange. Last week, the Iranian-backed rebels, who control large parts of northern Yemen, had released more than 400 prisoners, including those of high-ranking officials, as part of a preliminary agreement for peace talks. In what has been described as a 'positive' step, Al Masirah TV showed a clip of a meeting of the Houthi rebels with the freed prisoners, including Yemen's defence minister Mohammed Ali Al-Hadhrami and the head of the national police. The minister is shown shaking hands with the rebel chief of staff Khalid Ali Salem and later with the ministers of foreign affairs and public works, Abdel Al-Alimi and Salem Al-Zaiq. But other ministers said they were not present, despite earlier reports that they had arrived.
